

Case Studies:

Ask pupils to look at the individual case in small groups and discuss the following:

- What could have been done to prevent the issue?
- What advice would you give to the victim of revenge porn?
- How do you think the person sharing the porn through revenge would feel at the time of sharing?
- How do you think the revenge porn has affected the victims life and family?

Thug becomes the first person in Britain jailed for 'revenge porn' after posting intimate picture of his ex-girlfriend on WhatsApp

- Luke King was sent naked photos by victim during three-year relationship
- She contacted police when he threatened to post images after it ended
- He changed profile picture on internet messaging service to explicit photo
- King pleaded guilty to harassment and was jailed for 12 weeks
- Comes weeks after Government promised crackdown on 'revenge porn'

A spurned boyfriend who posted naked pictures of his ex-girlfriend on the internet is thought to be the first person jailed for 'revenge porn', it emerged yesterday.

Liam King, 21, was sent intimate pictures by the woman during their three-year on-off relationship.

But she went to police after he posted several of the images on social media sites, together with offensive comments, following the breakdown of their affair.

Those photos were meant just for the two of us. Breaking up with him didn't give him the right to deliberately humiliate me.

A paramedic has been struck off for revenge porn after using his work email to send explicit images of a colleague.

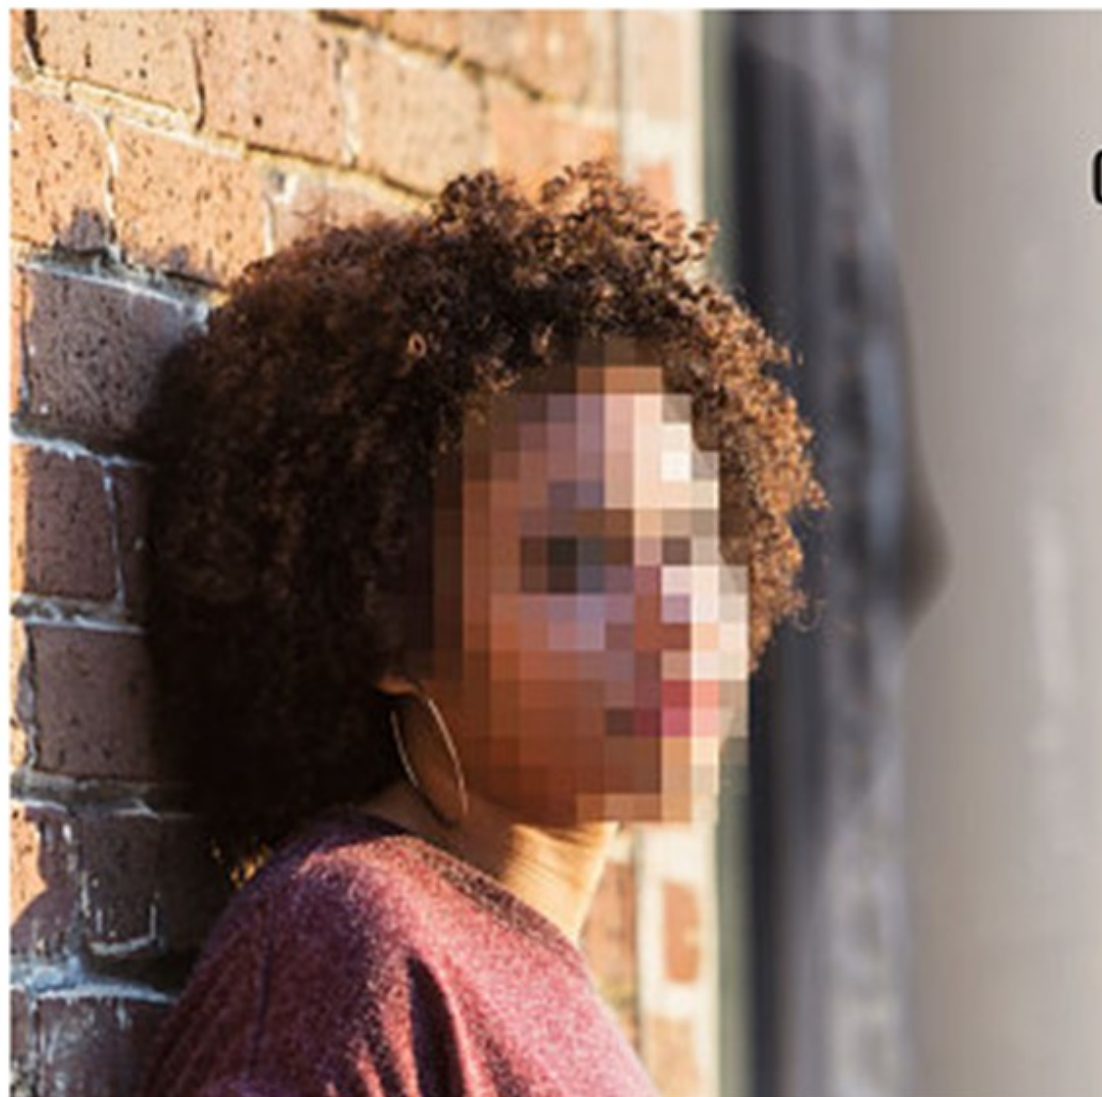

Guy Tanner emailed colleagues and national newspapers links to images, movies and messages involving Colleague A from his London Ambulance Service account.

I shared the pics to hurt her. Then things got out of control. It became a nightmare
for her and for me.

I felt violated. I couldn't face anyone,
not even my friends.
I didn't know who I could trust anymore.
